

I'm not robot!

can verify using `mode con`. You can achieve a similar result by typing `mode 1500`. See also `#MODE`, `wmic datafile where name="C:\Windows\System32\cmd.exe" get Version /value` Outputs the version of the `cmd.exe`, which should be close to the Windows version. Links: wmic at ss64.com wmic at Microsoft XCOPY^[edit | edit source] Copies files and directories in a more advanced way than `COPY`, deprecated in Windows Vista and later in favor of `ROBOCOPY`. Type `xcopy /?` to learn more, including countless options. Examples: `xcopy C:\Windows\system` Copies all files, but not files in nested folders, from the source folder ("C:\Windows\system") to the current folder. `xcopy /s /i C:\Windows\system C:\Windows-2\system` Copies all files and folders to any nesting depth (via `/s`) from the source folder ("C:\Windows\system") to "C:\Windows-2\system", creating "Windows-2\system" if it does not exist (via `/i`). `xcopy /s /i /d:09-01-2014 C:\Windows\system C:\Windows-2\system` As above, but copies only files changed on 1 September 2014 or later. Notice the use of the month-first convention even if you are on a non-US locale of Windows. `xcopy /L /s /i /d:09-01-2014 C:\Windows\system C:\Windows-2\system` As above, but in a test mode via `/L` (list-only, output-only, display-only). Thus, does not do any actual copying, merely lists what would be copied. `xcopy /s /i C:\Windows\system*.dll` C:\Windows-2\system As one of the examples above, but copies only files ending in `.dll`, including those in nested folders.
